Extreme Project Management Simulation

The PPI Extreme Project Management Simulation provides the participants an opportunity to plan a project and control its execution through a series of crises. The simulation of a project unfolding over time rapidly identifies potential bottlenecks and hidden weaknesses in a project plan. Added to this, external crises highlight portions of the project plan or project control approach that are fragile. In this course the participants see and experience the results of planning and execution decisions in a simulated business environment.

The simulation is based upon a project plan that the participants develop from a business scenario. The project execution is then initiated and the participants are able to make changes that they believe are appropriate to the project as the project unfolds. Periodically, situations develop that are outside the control of the team but require a response within the project. This allows the participants to actively plan for, and manage, risk within their project. The simulation can be coupled with one of the other Project Management programs offered by PPI or it can be a stand-alone course. The program length is normally three days.
